Fighting Against Forced Labour and Child Labour in Supply Chains Act

May 2025

Purpose of the report

Following the Fighting Against Forced Labour and Child Labour in Supply Chains Act (Act) that came into force on January 1, 2024, the Farm Products Council of Canada (FPCC) is submitting a report to document the steps it has taken during its previous financial year (from April 1, 2024 to March 31, 2025) to prevent and reduce the risk that forced labour or child labour is used at any step of the production of goods produced, purchased or distributed by the FPCC.

Structure, activities and supply chain

The FPCC is a public interest oversight body reporting to Parliament through the Minister of Agriculture and Agri-Food with the mandate to oversee the activities of the agencies created under the Farm Products Agencies Act and to work with them to promote more effective marketing of farm products. The FPCC's specific role is to provide oversight of the national supply management marketing agencies for poultry and eggs, and for the promotion-research agencies for farm products.

The FPCC's mission is to work with its stakeholders to ensure that the national poultry and eggs supply management marketing agencies and promotion-research agencies are responding to current and future challenges in a flexible, accountable and transparent manner.

The FPCC is a micro organization of less than 20 employees and is composed of up to seven members, all of whom are Governor in Council appointments. As an oversight body focused on regulations, FPCC's purchases are limited to routine office supply purchases with equipment and tools provided directly through Agriculture and Agri-Food Canada.

Policies and due diligence processes

Our procurement practices support fair consideration of suppliers, appropriate risk management and align with the Treasury Board of Canada Secretariat recommendations.

Although FPCC's scope is very small given the regulatory focused mandate and limited purchases involving supply chains, FPCC commits to, where possible, review procedures, tools, and policies ensuring a commensurate level of due diligence is in place to mitigate forced labour and child labour risks.

Forced labour and child labour risks

FPCC has assessed the type of products it procures within its supply chain to identify those that carry a risk of child labour or forced labour and compared them to external resources to evaluate their level of risk.

The procurement level for cellphones, laptops and other information technology equipment is quite limited due to the size of FPCC's workforce. Furthermore, the risk remains low as the procurement of such equipment is conducted through service agreements with other federal departments, such as Agriculture and Agri-Food Canada and Service Canada which have implemented purchase policies aligned with governmental directives.

Measures to remediate any forced labour or child labour

The FPCC has not identified any instances of forced labour or child labour in its operations or supply chains and as such has not taken remediation measures.

Measures to remediate loss of income

Over the reporting period, the FPCC has not identified any instances of forced labour or child labour in its activities and supply chains. As such, there was no remediation measures implemented to mitigate the loss of income for vulnerable families.

Employee training

The FPCC has not implemented any training activities on forced labor and child labour for its employees.

Assessing effectiveness

Given FPCC's very limited scope and purchases, it does not currently have policies and procedures in place to assess its effectiveness in ensuring that forced labour and child labour are not being used in its activities and supply chains.
